

Ask A Different Question

Editor's Pick. Written by Liberty.

Libertarians are regularly asked questions about how a libertarian country would solve a certain social problem. That whole idea is a bit ridiculous but there is a quick solution to just about everyone of those questions.

Questions that are asked are generally leading towards a statist solution. Despite the poor record of just about every state program, they do sometimes help answer the question asked.

If a statist were to ask you, how are we supposed to feed the poor? There is only one real solution. The only way to feed the poor is to feed the poor, right? It doesn't take a question there. The question is just a simple disguise of a statement.
