

How You Work Leads to Where You Work

It doesn't matter what your current job is. It could be fast food, babysitting, a cool tech company, or construction. You can leverage it into a great next step. One of the best ways that almost everyone overlooks is by loving your current role and treating it with enthusiasm and pride. And letting it show.

People who are always pumped about their work and clearly proud of what they do, sharing successes and trials, genuinely promoting their company, coworkers, and the mission, are people others want to work with. If you're living and breathing your job and clearly working to create value every day with joy, everyone who sees that will want that same enthusiasm for their company. They'll want to work with you.

How you work matters. People notice. If you work out loud with excitement in your current job, it will enhance the opportunity to find your next job more than you know.