

On Silk Road III

It's back! The New Silk Road launched yesterday. Though other online black market services saw their usage increase during the shutdown, this shows exactly why the War on Drugs is failed policy, online or offline. Though I don't consume recreational drugs, I am an advocate for the principle that everyone owns their body and has the right to smoke, snort, inject, drink, or eat whatever they damn well please. Who am I to use violence to prevent others from doing a nonviolent act? What right does anyone have to point a gun at the heads of drug users to compel them to not use their property their way? Important questions. And that's today's two cents.

Skyler.
