

Optimist, Pessimist, Realist

An optimist believes that civilization is rapidly advancing on the economic, scientific, and technological front.

A pessimist believes that civilization is rapidly deteriorating on the cultural, philosophical, and spiritual front.

A realist believes that, even though there is no necessary connection between the above two observations, they might nonetheless both be true.