

Re: Learning is Our Life

Our life is our school. This is our education. It didn't begin with Kindergarten & doesn't end with a piece of paper that declares us ready for a job. Our learning isn't confined to certain months of the year, or a specific building, or books that dissect & divide life into segments within chapters within subjects. We don't have notebooks dedicated to separating science from history from art from fun. There are words we can't spell. There are equations we can't solve. We answer our questions with more questions. We aren't concerned with earning points or impressing folks. We're not caught up in some great competition that pits children against children, adults against children, adults against adults. We're not rushing to complete some kind of bizarre race against the end of time. There is no end... not for us. We don't need a winter break, a spring break, a summer break from learning. Learning is our life.
