

Success in British Columbia – Prosecutor Requests Stay of Proceedings

Congrats to Ian and thanks for providing me the documentary proof. Ian defended against a traffic ticket by filing an application to dismiss and discovery request. Eventually the prosecutor requested a stay:

The image consists of two side-by-side photographs of a British Columbia court document. The left photograph shows the top portion of the document, including the date "August 21, 2017" and the signature of Peter Ng, Crown Counsel. The right photograph shows the bottom portion of the document, with a red box highlighting the "Allegations" section where "Peter Ng" is written.

Ian didn't get a responsive answer to the discovery request where we ask the prosecution for the evidence they rely on to prove their claim their rules ("laws") apply to us just because we're physically in Canada. We also need the name of the witness with personal knowledge the "laws" apply to us. So Ian filed to dismiss citing misconduct as grounds, as the prosecution was arguing without evidence.

The above action is what the prosecution took, they requested a stay of proceedings. If they had evidence proving their claim was true, they would just disclose it and get another easy conviction.

[embedded content]