

The “Social Contract” With the Government Is a Fraud

Editor's Pick. Written by Bill Bonner.

There are many theories to explain government. Most are nothing but scams, justifications, and puffery. One tries to put something over on the common man... the other claims it was for his own good... and the third pretends that he'd be lost without it.

Most are not really “theories” at all... but prescriptions, blueprints for creating the kind of government the “theorist” would like to have. Not surprisingly, the blueprints flatter his intellect and engage his imagination.

The “social contract,” for example, is a fraud. You can't have a contract unless you have two willing and able parties. They must come together in a meeting of the minds — a real agreement about what they are going to do together.

But what is the “social contract” with government? There was never a meeting of the minds. The deal was forced on the public. And now imagine that you want out. Can you simply “break the contract”? You refuse to pay your taxes and refuse to be bossed around by TSA agents and other government employees. How long will it be before you are put in jail?

What kind of contract is it that you don't agree to and can't get out of? They can dress it up... print out a piece of paper... have a solemn ceremony in which everyone pretends it is a real contract. But it's not worth the paper it's not written on.

Also, what kind of a contract allows for one party to unilaterally change the terms of the deal? Congress passes new laws almost every day. The bureaucracy issues new edicts. The tax system is changed. The pound of flesh they got already wasn't enough; now they want a pound and a half!

Here are the critical questions: Why do we let other people tell us what to do; are we not all equal? What is the purpose of government? What does it cost, and what benefits does it confer?
