

Dogmatism and the Pursuit of Truth

Editor's Pick. Written by T. K. Coleman.

I am dogmatically committed to being uncommitted to dogma.

As a matter of principle I do not regard any of my beliefs as anything other than provisional conceptual maps with which I attempt to navigate this vast mysterious sea of being we call "reality."

All philosophy becomes dangerous when we relinquish our responsibility to think critically in exchange for the security of dogma.

Read the full thing at Tough-Minded Optimism »