

Evolution II — End of War

Nobody asked but ...

Yesterday I wrote about four signs that would appear if the human species may be evolving in a positive way.

Today, I will expand on the first, that there would be a substantial end to war.

I am not a seer, and I do not pretend to know how this would be effected, but I would guess at these:

- War is the principle failure of the human species
- If man cannot bring sufficient reason to end global war, we will not be fit to survive
- We are the only species to make war for abstract reasons
- This is a fatal flaw
- We must evolve beyond tribalism and nationalism to stop symbolic war
- States will fail because they evolve toward complexity in a haphazard way
- A species on the other hand must achieve complexity in a rational way to be fit for survival.

— Kilgore Forelle