

It's Time To Debunk The Myth That Copyright Is Needed To Make Money – Or That It Even Makes Money

Guest post by Rick Falkvinge.

One of the most persistent myths about the copyright monopoly has been that it's needed to make money. This assertion turns out to be false for a very large number of observed cases, but the plural of anecdote is never statistics. So let's look at some sound statistical evidence for policy-making on this issue.

Read the full thing »