

“Productive Conversation” on Reinstating Slavery?

The anti-gun bigots out there are really upset that you and I aren't willing to discuss “gun control” [sic] with them. I mean, why can't we just sit down for a “productive conversation”?

There's a very good reason: some topics are simply not worth discussing.

Why can't “we” have a productive conversation on how to work out a compromise on slavery?

Because slavery is WRONG. There's no possible compromise between slavery and the absence of slavery. There's no reason to keep rehashing the topic. Nothing can ever change to make slavery OK. Not your feelings and not the behavior of bad people. It doesn't matter how many people honestly believe slavery is necessary or will save lives.

That's the same reason “we” can't have a conversation on “gun control” [sic]. It's wrong. It's unethical. It's illegal- of course, “laws” can be changed and the Constitution can be ignored. There's no reason to keep rehashing the topic until you come up with the results you want. Nothing can ever make anti-gun “laws” OK. Not your feelings or the acts of bad people. It doesn't matter how many people honestly believe slavery- in the form of anti-gun “laws”- is necessary or will save lives.

I'm not willing to “discuss” anti-gun ideas with anyone for the same reason I'm not willing to discuss re-instituting chattel slavery.

Their idea of “productive” is that they get to violate your natural human rights more than they already do. So, no, I'm not going to give you the time of day for that “conversation”.

Only anti-gun bigots find this unreasonable. Ethical people with worthwhile principles understand the trap and aren't willing to participate in their own enslavement.
