Nobody asked but ...

I believe that libertarians put a value on being left alone. This necessarily includes self-ownership and self-determination and self-recognition of all responsibilities assumed. The assumption of responsibility is the thing a libertarian has chosen to owe to others. The anti-libertarian believes that the libertarian will evade those responsibilities. But then the anti-libertarian is actually concerned with the pseudo-libertarian, not the libertarian. And my question is, who asked him?
