Re: Technology and Educational Salvation

Directed at an LDS audience, Jeffrey Thayne writes:

> [The education] solution may not be to tweak, repair, or reform the existing system, but to change our entire paradigm of how education is to be handled in the first place. That is, we need to question the existence of institutions that transfer the responsibility of education from parents to bureaucracies. This is something that technology can't do. Technology won't enact that change. This is something only moral suasion can do.