

Short Manifesto Against Democracy

Written by Rob Alvord.

My quick manifesto against democracy before voting day:

Some people have Verizon, some have T Mobile. Some have Progressive, some have Allstate. I love that we are able to choose these preferences without having to cause disputes amongst ourselves as human beings.

Tomorrow, a majority of people are going to decide major policies that will be forced upon a minority. Is it any wonder democracy why is so divisive?

Many of you will ask: What is the alternative? Market governance. Essentially choose who you give patronage to in the same way you would choose any other service. What you choose is for you, and what I choose is for me.

I have to admit, I'm actually not 100% market law would work, but I think it could. But even if you disagree with that, can't we both at least hope it does?
