The Collapse of "Peace and Security" For Freedom and Responsibility

In the past, man was often stupid, but rarely constantly dumbfounded, and often immoral, but rarely constantly demoralized. In other words, the main problem of today's man is not his degradation, but the learned passivity and the unawareness of being its victim; and the only effective solution to this problem is not "peace and security" but freedom and responsibility.

At the same time, it may indeed be the case that only the collapse of the illusion of "peace and security" is able to sober a person up enough to make him realize the need for freedom and responsibility again – with the key proviso that he is not able to satisfy this need through no political regime or ideological front. In a world where global politics is only a great spectacle of evil, and media ideology is only an artificial fog to hide this fact, you have a unique and perhaps last chance to regain this awareness permanently – so there are no good excuses anymore, so as not to take full advantage of it.
