

Without Borders

Nobody asked but ...

In my previous post, Kilgore's Travels, I reveled in the fact that I could span the globe, cybernetically, using the amazing app, Google Earth. Today, I realized that I went where I wanted without regard to borders, or without thinking whether I was welcomed there or not.

So today, I will try to visit some sites that may be forbidden to me and/or Google. Let's try The Kremlin. And ... here I am in Red Square —

What about Tibet? Voilà! The Potala Palace in Lhasa:

Now let's look at a place inundated by current events, Baghdad (Iraq, not Kentucky):

Where would you like to go?
