

Your Child, Not Your Property

Editor's Pick. Written by biglovelittlehouse.

My husband was playing with my daughter at the dinner table and was having cute little conversations with her. He tickled her underarm (which she normally thinks is hilarious) and suddenly she said "DON'T tickle me." And that was that. We apologized and told her he wouldn't.

Children are born to us, they are our blessed responsibility, a gift even. But they are not our property. If I lean in, to give my daughter a hug and she says that she doesn't want a hug, I do not give her a hug at that moment. I do shower her with love and affection all the time, but if she states a preference that at that time, she does not wish for me to hug her, I respect her wishes.

Read the full thing here »